Thanks. Please be aware that ATS assumes the risk of the investment in this expansion. City Council supports the enhanced safety provided by the additional locations but we also expect an election ballot item related to red light cameras in May 2010.

Subject: Second Texas City Initiates Traffic Camera Referendum

What is the story?

Second Texas City Initiates Traffic Camera Referendum
Activists in Baytown, Texas work to put red light cameras to a public vote.

Inspired by the success of the College Station, Texas initiative banning red light cameras, activists a hundred miles away in are collecting signatures to do the same in Baytown. Officials in the Gulf Coast city of 72,000 allowed American Traffic Solutions to set up the cameras in April 2008, but resident Byron Schirmbeck is circulating a petition in the hopes of giving voters the opportunity to take them back down.

"The response has been absolutely overwhelming," Schirmbeck told TheNewspaper. "I am conservative in saying that I have had less than ten percent of people I asked at public places refuse to sign because they support the cameras. The usual response to the question, 'Would you like to sign the petition to ban the red light cameras?' is 'Hell yes' and 'Can I get my wife to sign it too?'"

Schirmbeck formed the Baytown Red Light Camera Coalition PAC to coordinate the petition drive. He needs 620 verified signatures to qualify the initiative for the next ballot. No photo enforcement program has ever survived a public referendum.

Schirmbeck has been especially interested in the issue since he caught the city using illegally short yellow times in an effort to increase revenue. After he beat his ticket at West Baker and Garth Roads earlier this year, the city increased the yellow time to 4.5 seconds on June 5. Seeing the number of $75 violations drop, the city decreased the yellow time to 4.0 seconds in July. The city justified this change by putting up a 40 MPH speed limit sign on the camera-monitored approach, even though the other side of the same road is posted at 45 MPH. Texas law sets minimum yellow timing standards according to the posted speed limit.

"Just when I think I have seen the city do everything they can to keep their revenue with the cameras they go and surprise me again," Schirmbeck said.

Randy,

When you get a chance could you send Kandus a list of projects that the city has done using the revenue from your program? Kandus is putting together an article about the cities that are on the program and the useful projects that have been paid for by the program.

Thanks,
Jerry

We would like to get some more details in regards to this from each client. Jerry, I know you sent me the info on SIDNE for Baytown, but I want to make sure there aren't any more projects. Would either of you be able to contact Baytown and Humble regarding this? Let me know. Thanks!

Kandus,

3/4/2010

You can contact Humble and Baytown. I do know they have used the revenue to fund various safety projects.

We are in the process of putting a marketing piece together that mentions the benefits of a photo enforcement program in regards to revenue, and we are looking for specific examples from our clients. Can you let me know you have any clients that have used the revenue generated from their program to fund other projects or needs? Thanks so much for your help.

Patti,

A quick update. Understand that the comparison data is 18 months prior to activation and 18 months after. However, most of our lights have not been active for a full 18 months yet so we need to remember it.

In the total number of accidents at the intersections with cameras, we have a 41.2% reduction. In rear end accidents we have a 28.1% reduction. Individual intersection data may vary, but overall the majority show an improvement all the way around.

Garry asked me to get with you to write a "facts only" oped piece on the red light camera program. I've tried to put together a plan as to what information needed to be included such. Would you mind looking at my list and filling in as much detail as you think appropriate? I'll rewrite into an article and send back to you for additional guidance. Garry has asked for this by the end of the day tomorrow, so time is of the essence. He's instructed me that this is priority for me. ☺
